

Christopher A. Corpora, Ph.D. is Executive Vice President for Strategy with Horizon Awareness Systems and a regarded expert on global illicit trafficking, transnational organized crime, corruption and violent extremism. Most recently he served as the Chief of Party for support to the Syrian Opposition with the U.S. Department of State's (DOS) Bureau for Conflict and Stabilization Operations (CSO). Dr. Corpora also served as Chief of Party for CSO's Maldives post-coup engagement, Senior Advisor for anti-corruption to ISAF and Deputy Director for Anti-Corruption at the U.S. Embassy in Kabul, Afghanistan. Prior to joining CSO, he served as a Senior Advisor to the Federal Bureau of Investigations – overseeing a directorate level reorganization and helping establish the FBI's first, focused program to work with state and local law enforcement investigative fusion centers and was a Special Agent with the U.S. Department of Defense. Throughout his career he has worked with and supported multiple private and public-private sector efforts to address the myriad threats associated with illicit trade and transnational organized crime in at-risk regions. Dr. Corpora is a current Adjunct Professor at George Mason University's (GMU) School of Public Policy and is a noted nontraditional security threats expert – ranging across the spectrum from counterterrorism through money laundering/threat finance to countering violent extremism – focusing on their effects in developing, conflict and post-conflict regions.

Dr. Corpora is an accomplished, career national security and law enforcement professional with over 25 years of military, civilian government and private sector experience. He has published and presented dozens of scholarly essays, articles and book chapters and is an active senior fellow and scholar in several research and policy institutes, most notably the Terrorism, Transnational Crime and Corruption Center (TraCCC) at GMU. His most recent publication is "The tangled relationship between organized crime, terrorism and proliferation," in Michael Tanji's 2009 edited volume Threats in the Age of Obama and is currently finishing a book chapter on international money laundering and threat finance schemes for a forthcoming edited volume with Villanova University. He received his Ph.D. from American University's School of International Service in 2005. He is the proud father of three wonderfully talented daughters and lives in Northern Virginia.
